

I am opposed to the idea of removing limits on the ownership of media outlets. I feel strongly that these rules were there for a good reason and that they have provided more media choices and more points of view for the public. Also, I see that producers are now opposed to media consolidation because they feel it would be a disadvantage for them, and could lead to lower quality programming in the future. I believe the media outlets can make enough money without any rule change, and that providing free broadcast services to the public is not a compelling reason to get rid of the rules. I now receive free television via broadcast instead of subscribing to cable. I believe I am being served well now.
